every newspaper has commented with good proportion between the magnitude of the Nation's rejoicing and of the victory at Manila which no Briton is quite ready to class with Trafalgar and the Nile. Nothing could be heartier or more generous than "The Times" leader to-day on the New-York celebration and the gallantry of the distinguished American The truth is that Englishmen would be overloyed if they could have an opportunity for triumphing over a similar victory of their own fleet. They have had many small wars on land during the present reign, but no real trial of their sea power. A sturdy Briton looking up to the tip of the Nelson column in Trafalgar Square remarks: "The only trouble about Dewey is that he is not an Englishman, but perhaps he's the next best thing, a good American. If his victory at Manila had been won under the English flag there would be another column
